

R. Gibson, My Years . . .

We can take a deep pride in the work of the Communist Party of Australia over the years. Thousands of our fellow-Australians,—many of them now dead, many of them still living, many of them mentioned in these pages, many more of them not mentioned but equally deserving of honor and tribute—have displayed great devotion, courage and self-sacrifice in building the Party as we know it today. It is for us to carry forward the work with all the intelligence, vigor and fighting spirit of which we are capable.
