Reaction to Ban in Australia

BY DAVID HELLEW

The reaction of the League Communist to the ban imposed on their activities throughout Australia has been fierce. The League has not only denied the validity of the ban, but has also challenged its legality. The League has stated that the ban is not only unjustified, but is also a violation of the freedom of speech and association guaranteed by the Constitution.

Editorial

LIFT THE BAN ON THE LIGUE COMMUNISTE

On June 23, 1973, the French government imposed a ban on the League Communist, a Trotskyist group. The ban was imposed after the French government received reports of activities by the League Communist that were considered to be subversive.

LIFT THE BAN ON THE LIGUE COMMUNISTE

A public meeting was held in Paris on June 23, 1973, to protest the ban imposed on the League Communist. The meeting was organized by the League Communist and was attended by a large number of supporters. The meeting, which was held in the French language, included speeches by League Communist leaders and members.

Mass Protest in Paris

BY CAROLINE LOUISE

The ban on the League Communist in France was met with widespread protests. People took to the streets of Paris to demonstrate against the ban. The protests were peaceful and were met with a show of force by the French police.

As the police moved in, they carried with them a deep feeling of anger and determination. The CP had been active in the region for some time, and they knew that they faced a difficult battle. The police, on the other hand, were confident in their ability to defeat the CP. The CP's leader, Pierre Taittinger, had been arrested earlier in the week, and the police believed that this would be a decisive blow to the organization.

The CP denounced the police action as a violation of their rights and called for solidarity with Taittinger. They vowed to continue their struggle against the police and the government. Meanwhile, the police remained determined to bring down the CP and its leaders. The struggle between the two sides was just beginning.

The Paris Police Department had been approached by the Socialists, who were concerned about the growing influence of the CP in the city. They believed that the CP was a threat to the stability of the city and to the government. The police, on the other hand, had been asked by the Communists to help them in their fight against the government. The police were caught in the middle of a political tug of war.

The situation escalated when the police raided the headquarters of the CP in the city center. The police were met with resistance from the CP members, who were determined to protect their organization. The police were forced to use tear gas to make their way into the building. The CP members, in turn, threw rocks and Molotov cocktails at the police. The police were ultimately able to make their way into the building and arrest several CP members.

Since the election of the Government last year, the Labor Party has been accused of discrimination against black people. This charge has been made by the Prime Minister, Mr. Gough Whitlam, and by the Labor Party. The Government has responded by saying that it is implementing policies to help black people, but critics say that the policies are not effective enough.

The Labor Party has been accused of discriminating against black people in several areas, including housing, education, and employment. The Government has responded by saying that it is trying to address these issues through policies such as the National Employment Development Plan and the National Housing Strategy.

The Prime Minister has said that the Government is committed to improving the lives of black people, but critics say that the policies are not working. They point to high rates of unemployment and poverty among black people as evidence of discrimination.

The Labor Party has also been accused of discriminating against black people in the area of education. Critics say that black students are not receiving the same opportunities as their white counterparts, and that the Government is not doing enough to address this issue.

The Shah of Iran is determined to assert his country's new role in the region and to expand the power and influence of his government. His moves may well affect the political landscape of the Middle East and beyond.

The Shah's policies are aimed at strengthening the economic and military power of Iran, and at increasing the country's influence in the Arab-Persian Gulf region. His government is keen to establish itself as a regional power, and to assert its authority over the Gulf, which is a strategic area of great importance.

The Shah's policies have been met with both support and opposition. Some have praised his efforts to现代ize and industrialize Iran, and to improve the country's economy. Others have criticized his authoritarian rule, and have accused him of using the country's wealth to maintain a luxurious lifestyle at the expense of the people.

The Shah's policies have also been a source of tension with other countries in the region, particularly with Iraq. The two countries have long-standing disputes over border issues and resources, and the Shah's efforts to expand Iran's influence in the Gulf have been seen as a threat to Iraq's own interests.

The Shah's policies are likely to continue to shape the political landscape of the Middle East for some time to come. It remains to be seen how successful he will be in achieving his goals, and how his policies will be received by other countries in the region.

US Energy Crisis Serves Monopoly Super-Profits

By Hershel Clancy

The US energy crisis has served to increase the power and profits of oil monopolies. The crisis has created a situation in which the oil companies are able to charge high prices, and to control the market for oil.

The oil companies have been able to increase their profits by taking advantage of the high demand for oil. The companies have been able to charge high prices for their products, and to sell out their stocks of oil at high prices. This has allowed the companies to make huge profits, and to increase their power in the market.

The Link with Bhutto

With a strong showing in the recent elections, Bhutto's Pakistan People's Party (PPP) is likely to win the next general election in Pakistan. The PPP's success is due in part to its ability to appeal to the country's poor and rural population.

The PPP's strategies have been successful in winning over the country's rural electorate, who have been hit hard by the economic crisis. The party has promised to work for the benefit of the rural population, and to provide them with better access to education and healthcare.

The PPP's success is also due to its ability to appeal to the country's small and medium-sized businesses. The party has promised to provide them with better access to credit and to reduce taxes.

The PPP's success is also due to its ability to appeal to the country's middle class. The party has promised to work for the benefit of the middle class, and to provide them with better access to education and healthcare.

THE BUILDERS LABOURERS
Interview with Bob Pringle

Fight for 35 hr Week

The NSW Liberal Government's move to reduce the 40 hour week to 35 hours has created a major controversy. The move was announced in a bid to reduce the cost of labor and increase productivity. The move has been met with mixed reactions, with some unions applauding the move and others denouncing it as a move against workers' rights.

The move has sparked a debate over the impact of reducing the work week on productivity and the overall economy. While some argue that a shorter work week would lead to increased productivity, others argue that it would have the opposite effect.

Direct Action: How has the response to the move been?
Pringle: Since 1991 the Builders Labourers Federation has been fighting for a 35 hour week. This was brought about by the massacre of the 1991 miners' strikes which led to the deaths of several union members. The federation has been fighting for a 35 hour week ever since.

Direct Action: What has been the response from the public?
Pringle: The public has been generally supportive of the federation's efforts. However, there have been some concerns raised about the impact of a shorter work week on productivity and the economy.

Direct Action: How has the move impacted the industry?
Pringle: The move has impacted the industry in several ways. On the one hand, it has led to increased productivity, as workers have been able to work more efficiently. On the other hand, it has also led to a decrease in the number of workers available, which has had an impact on the industry's ability to meet demand.

The move has also had a significant impact on the federation's negotiations with employers. The federation has been able to secure better conditions for workers, as employers have been forced to compete for a smaller pool of workers.

Direct Action: What are the federation's plans for the future?
Pringle: The federation's plans for the future include continuing to negotiate with employers to secure better conditions for workers. The federation also plans to continue its fight for a 35 hour week, as it believes that this is the best way to protect workers' rights.

Ford Strike Continues

Ford workers have been on strike for several months, demanding better working conditions and higher wages. The strike has created tension between the company and the union, with both sides refusing to budge.

The dispute centers around the issue of job security. Ford has been vitrolic with job cuts, while the union has been fighting to secure better job security for its members.

The strike has also had an impact on the local economy, as many people have lost their jobs due to the strike.

Direct Action: What is the current status of the strike?
Ford: The strike is ongoing, with no resolution in sight. The company and the union are still at odds over the issue of job security.

Direct Action: What are the prospects of a settlement?
Ford: The prospects of a settlement are slim, as both sides are dug in and unwilling to compromise.

Brewery Workers Go Back

The recent strike at the brewery has been a disaster for both the company and the workers. The strike was called in response to the company's decision to cut wages and benefits, as well as its refusal to recognize the union.

The strike was called in March and lasted for several weeks. The company eventually gave in to the workers' demands and agreed to recognize the union.

The strike has had a significant impact on the local economy, as many people have lost their jobs due to the strike.

Direct Action: What is the current status of the strike?
Brewery: The strike is over, with the company and the workers reaching a settlement.

Direct Action: What are the prospects of a settlement?
Brewery: The prospects of a settlement are good, as both sides have agreed to compromise and work together.

Peronist Shoot-out in Argentina

By Alasdair MacKay

Over 20 people were killed and over 80 injured in a Peronist shoot-out in Buenos Aires last week, the latest in a series of violent outbreaks in the country's capital. The conflict began when a Peronist leader was killed by opposition supporters. The shooting was followed by a general strike, paralyzing the city. The government has declared a state of emergency, and martial law has been declared in some areas.

Wilson Challenges Labour Executive

The British prime minister, Harold Wilson, has challenged the Labour Party's trade union allies, warning that the government will not accept any proposals that are not in the national interest. The row began after the TUC (Trades Union Congress) threatened to withdraw its support from the Labour government unless it agreed to a series of proposals, including a wage freeze and cuts in public spending.

By Frank Carpenter

The so-called "Left-Handed" Combined Campaign for the NSW Labor Party has been launched, and is now in full swing. The "Left" is determined to make sure that the NSW Labor Party will be led by a true Left-wing government, not by a right-wing one. The campaign will focus on issues such as social justice, workers' rights, and environmental protection.

The meeting was also attended by many left-wing activists from other states, who came to show their support for the NSW campaign. The atmosphere was electric, with many people holding signs and chanting slogans.

The NSW Labor Party has traditionally been a right-wing party, but in recent years there has been a growing movement within the party to shift to the left. This movement has been led by a group of left-wing activists who are determined to make sure that the party stands up for the interests of workers and the poor.

The NSW Labor Party is facing a difficult election, with the Greens and the Labor Left gaining ground. The left-wing activists hope that the campaign will help them to secure a win.

Labor and Foreign Investment

By John Kelly

The government has been criticized for its recent foreign investment policies, which some see as too lenient. The government has been accused of failing to protect Australian jobs and businesses from foreign companies.

The government has responded by arguing that its policies are necessary in order to attract foreign investment, which is vital for the country's economic growth. However, critics say that the government is not doing enough to ensure that foreign companies are held accountable for their actions.

The issue of foreign investment is a sensitive one, and it is likely to be a major topic of discussion in the upcoming election.

HUNDREDS MARCH JUNE 30 TO REPEAL ABORTION LAWS

BY NITA KEIG

In the first major action taken by pro-abortion groups since the defeat of the McPherson Lamb bill in Federal Parliament, over 400 people, most of them women, marched through the streets of Sydney on June 30. They demanded repeal of all abortion laws, and free abortion services. Marchers carried banners bearing their demands as well as others which raised the fundamental issues relating to abortion, such as: Abortion Is A Woman's Right To Choose, Women's Right To Control Their Bodies, All Women Are Equal, and Our Bodies Belong To Neither Church Nor State.

A further banner carried at the very end of the march summed up the determined attitude of those participating. It read: This Is Not Only The Beginning.

The march was enthusiastic and militant as it circulated the main blocks of the city with the marchers chanting: Repeal All Abortion Laws, Abolish Laws That Murder Women, Every Child Should Be Wanted, and others. Some of the placards calling for the repeal of all abortion laws was also carried, along with an army of many other hand-painted ones.

The purpose of the march, as far as the street scene indicated, was to rally support for the aims of the demonstrators and the many young people who were actively opposed to abortion.

The march concluded with a rally in Hyde Park which was addressed by George Paterson, NSW Labor MLA. Reginal Gillings, vice-president of the Abortion Action Coalition, and Nita Keig from the Women's Abortion Action Campaign. Later the platform was opened up for visitors from the march coming forward and relating their experiences with abortion.

All speakers took up the question of what to do in the future, stressing the need to continue challenging the existing laws. George Paterson spoke about the legal situation relating to the abortion laws in NSW, and that doctors were able to perform abortions with some immunity. This was due to the increased reluctance of the police to press charges against doctors performing abortions in light of the legal precedent set by the sequential changes in the Hoadless Clinic case and the other Sydney doctor case, which was the abortion laws. The situation points to the fact that only a relatively small number of illegal abortions are actually obtained by the vast majority of women.

Reginal Gillings continued with this theme and related it to the establishment of abortion clinics. He spoke of the oppression of women which came about due to the existence of these laws and how this was connected by the present structure.

Raising the whole strategic question of just how the laws were to be repealed,
