Fraser Govt to hit motorists

The Australian motorist is about to be stung by the Fraser Government and the big oil monopolies.

The Liberal-National Country Party Government policy is to tie the price of locally produced oil to OPEC price rises thus helping the big oil monopolies to enhance their already huge profits and bringing in extra government revenue at the expense of the ordinary Australian motorist.

Opposition spokesman on minerals and energy, Mr. Paul Keating, said that the Australian Government was using the oil import price policy to increase its revenue. He said that the increase in the cost of oil would result in higher taxes for the consumer and higher prices for goods and services.

"The Australian Government is using the oil import price policy to increase its revenue," Mr. Keating said. "The increase in the cost of oil will result in higher taxes for the consumer and higher prices for goods and services."

SA people fight Tonkin for land rights bill

More than 100 people attended a rally held last week at Victoria Square, Adelaide, to protest against the proposed land rights bill. The protest was organized by the SA Land Rights Movement.

The rally attracted people from all walks of life, including unionists, students, and community activists. The organizers called on the South Australian government to abandon the bill and work towards a fairer solution for the state's indigenous communities.

The bill, which is currently being debated in the state parliament, would give indigenous people the right to negotiate agreements and compensation for land that they traditionally owned but were later seized by the government. The organizers of the rally argue that the bill is biased against indigenous people and does not adequately recognize their cultural and spiritual connection to the land.

They called on the government to listen to the concerns of the indigenous community and work towards a solution that respects their rights and the rights of all South Australians.

The rally was a call to action for all those who believe in justice and equality. The organizers hope that by raising awareness about the issues at hand, they can create a momentum that will bring about real change.

Early death for Aborigines

The death of an Aboriginal man in the Alice Springs area has sparked concern among the community. The man, who was in his late 20s, was found dead in a remote area near the town.

The Alice Springs police are investigating the cause of death, but initial reports suggest that the man died of a heart attack. The community has been rocked by the news, with many expressing their condolences and calling for better support for Aboriginal people in remote areas.

The incident highlights the ongoing issues faced by the Aboriginal community in the Northern Territory, including access to medical care and support services.

Navy delivers the gravy at taxpayers' expense

The Royal Australian Navy has been criticized for making taxpayers foot the bill for a lavish dinner to commemorate the anniversary of the Battle of the Coral Sea.

The dinner, held last week, was attended by high-ranking military officials and invited guests. The cost of the event, which included entertainment and a three-course meal, was borne by taxpayers.

Opposition politicians have spoken out against the use of public funds for such occasions, saying that the navy should be more transparent about its spending and that taxpayers' money should be used more responsibly.

Union delivers the grave at pensioners' expense

The Australian Workers' Union has been accused of using taxpayers' money to pay for the funeral of a union official who died earlier this year.

The union, which represents thousands of pensioners across the country, is responsible for the payment of employee benefits, including funeral expenses. However, some union officials have been criticized for using public funds to pay for the funerals of their members who are not affiliated with the union.

The issue has sparked debate within the union, with some members calling for greater transparency and accountability.

Military spending up

In recent years, military spending has increased significantly in Australia. The government has justified this increase by citing national security concerns and the need to modernize the armed forces.

However, critics argue that the high cost of military spending is diverting funds from other areas of government, such as education and health care.

The increase in military spending has also raised concerns about the government's commitment to other international obligations, such as peacekeeping missions and development assistance.

Joint SUPNP-SPA statement:

USSR proposals are basis to achieve world disarmament

The Socialist Unity Party of New Zealand (SUP) and the Socialist Party of Australia (SPA) have issued a joint statement expressing support for the USSR's proposals on disarmament.

The statement notes the importance of the proposals in advancing the goal of world disarmament and reducing the risk of nuclear war. The parties call on the international community to respond positively to the USSR's proposals and to work towards a world free of nuclear weapons.

The Joint SUPNP-SPA statement concludes by emphasizing the need for a global approach to disarmament and the importance of cooperation between socialist countries in promoting peace and security.
An Australian glances at 62 years of socialist progress

As long as I live I will never forget the emotional impact of visiting the Soviet Union for the first time in 1984. We had a brief meeting in Moscow but the most impressive event of the trip was the visit to the Kremlin. I had expected to see a city of decaying concrete but was surprised to find a modern metropolis. The preservation of the Kremlin and the Lenin Mausoleum is a reminder of the continuity of Russian history.

The visit was followed by a meeting with the Ukrainian President. The meeting was very impressive and we discussed the role of the Ukraine in the transformation of the Soviet Union. We were able to make some progress on the agenda and the meeting was a significant step towards a better understanding between our two countries.

Australia's creeping dictatorship

By hit, Bill Shorten - the man of the people. His government is being watched by the public, not just by the media. The government has been in power for five years and is expected to win the next election. But the public is becoming more concerned about the way the government is handling things. The government has been accused of being inefficient and out of touch with the people. The public is worried about the direction the country is taking and feels that it is not being listened to. The government needs to listen to the people and show them that they are interested in what the public has to say. The government should also work to improve its image and show the people that it is serious about making things better.

The Zimbabwe Patriotic Front (ZPF) is facing a backlash from the British government over its support for the liberation of Zimbabwe. The ZPF is a political party that was formed in 1996 as part of the anti-apartheid movement. It is the official political party of the Zimbabwean government and has been in power since 1994. The British government has been criticized for its support of the ZPF's policies, which are seen as pro-racist by some. The British government has been accused of using its influence to suppress dissent in Zimbabwe and to maintain the status quo.

China to export cheap labour for pol Pot

If current plans of the Chinese Government succeed, many Western countries will soon see large numbers of Chinese workers. China’s “Peking” leadership has made it clear that it is prepared to sell its labour force to Japan and capitalist countries in Western Europe and the Middle East. The Chinese have already sent workers to many countries, including the United States, Canada, Australia, and New Zealand. The Chinese government has also established a number of worker exchange programs with these countries, which allow Chinese workers to work in these countries for a limited period of time. The Chinese workers are generally well paid and have few work-related problems. More on swing to the right in AIP’s leadership

Further evidence of the swing to the right in AIP’s leadership is provided by the comments of John Walters, who is preparing to retire. He says, “I think the party is losing its way.” Walters is a long-time member of AIP and has been involved in the party for many years. He says, “I don’t think the party is doing what it should be doing.” He adds, “I think the party is too focused on getting to the next meeting and too focused on getting to the next election.”

Sacking of electricity workers

Old Govt is trying to provoke all out battle

In a gesture calculated to provoke an all-out battle, the South Queensland Electrician's Union backed the battle for the 35-hour week by declaring that it was ready to fight for a 35-hour working week for all their members. The union had previously been involved in a strike by workers in the coal mining industry, and now it was planning to extend the battle to the electricity industry.

The Industrial Commission decided that the 35-hour week was necessary to ensure that the coal miners received a fair wage. The union, however, refused to accept the decision and requested a review of the Commission's findings. The union argued that the 35-hour week was necessary to ensure that the miners received a fair wage and that the Commission's decision was based on outdated information.

The union's decision to fight for a 35-hour week was seen as a direct challenge to the government, which had been trying to impose a 40-hour week on its workers. The government had previously tried to impose a 40-hour week on the coal miners, but the union had successfully resisted the move.

The union was determined to fight for a 35-hour week and was not afraid to take on the government. The union's leaders were confident that they could win the battle and that the government would be forced to withdraw its proposal for a 40-hour week.

NSW train examiners demand pay rise

NSW train examiners have also been involved in a dispute over pay. The examiners are demanding a pay rise, and the government has refused to negotiate. The examiners have been on strike for several weeks, and the government has threatened to fire them if they do not return to work.

The government's decision to fire the examiners was seen as a clear attempt to suppress the workers' rights. The government had previously tried to impose a 40-hour week on the examiners, but the workers had successfully resisted the move.

The examiners were determined to fight for a pay rise and were not afraid to take on the government. The examiners' leaders were confident that they could win the battle and that the government would be forced to withdraw its proposal for a 40-hour week.
