To Republic ... or Not to Republic? ... That is the Question

BY PETER MURPHY

... On Republicanism

September 1999

$2.00

Issue 1

The Republican

AUSTRALIA'S INDEPENDENT BROADCHEEET

Australians...
Crowning a New Identity

BY MARY NAKAYA

I am writing this essay in the spirit of the "Westminster system", which is a political system based on the British model of government. This system has been in place in Australia for over 100 years, and it is a system that has served the country well. However, as with any political system, there are flaws and issues that need to be addressed.

The Westminster system is a system of government that is based on the British model of government. It is a system that has been in place in Australia for over 100 years, and it is a system that has served the country well. However, as with any political system, there are flaws and issues that need to be addressed.

One of the main issues with the Westminster system is the lack of representation of certain groups in Parliament. For example, women have not always had the same representation as men in Parliament, and there have been times when members of the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities have felt excluded from the political process.

Another issue with the Westminster system is the lack of accountability. The system is designed to be a representative system, but it can sometimes be difficult to hold members of Parliament accountable for their actions.

Despite these issues, the Westminster system has served Australia well. It has provided a stable and democratic framework for the country to function. It has allowed for the representation of a wide range of interests, and it has provided a mechanism for decision-making.

In conclusion, the Westminster system is an important part of the political landscape in Australia. It has served the country well, but it is important to continue to assess its strengths and weaknesses and to make improvements as necessary. Only then can we ensure that the system continues to serve the needs of all Australians.

Every time we use the phrase the Westminster system we implicitly suggest that the essential features and traditions of our political institutions have come from somewhere else. Because we believe they are not of our own making we have taken little interest in discovering the history of their formations or claiming them as our own. There is a huge range of political systems across the world, each with its own unique features and traditions. It is important to recognize that these systems are not just foreign imports, but are the result of long histories of development and evolution.

For Australian people, especially those who are interested in political history, it is important to understand the evolution of political institutions. This can help us to appreciate the importance of these systems and the role they play in our society.

The history of political institutions is a rich and complex topic, but it is one that is worth exploring. By understanding the history of political institutions, we can better appreciate the importance of these systems and the role they play in our society.

The Westminster system is just one example of a political system that has evolved over time. There are many other systems that have played an important role in the development of political institutions in Australia. It is important to recognize the diversity of political systems and the role they play in our society.

In conclusion, the history of political institutions is a rich and complex topic, but it is one that is worth exploring. By understanding the history of political institutions, we can better appreciate the importance of these systems and the role they play in our society.

The Westminster system is just one example of a political system that has evolved over time. There are many other systems that have played an important role in the development of political institutions in Australia. It is important to recognize the diversity of political systems and the role they play in our society.

In conclusion, the history of political institutions is a rich and complex topic, but it is one that is worth exploring. By understanding the history of political institutions, we can better appreciate the importance of these systems and the role they play in our society.
AN IDEA OF FREEDOM!

We must worry that we are pawns in the power of anonymous controllers.

Yes...and MORE!

Why I Stay in the Republican Camp

Republirophobia, n. the fear of becoming a republic
why Australia needs
a Charter of Rights

BY MORCA ROPPER

In this day of the Constitution, it seems appropriate to consider the fact that Australia's Constitution is so weak that it cannot effectively protect the rights of its citizens. The Constitution fails to address the fundamental issues that affect the lives of Australians, and it is time for a Charter of Rights to be established.

1. Aren't our rights adequately protected already?

The Constitution protects our rights to a certain extent, but it is not comprehensive and does not address all the issues that affect our lives. For example, it does not protect the rights of non-citizens, or the rights of indigenous Australians. It is time for a Charter of Rights to be established to address these issues.

2. Would a constitutionally entrenched charter make a difference?

A constitutionally entrenched charter would make a significant difference to the protection of our rights. It would provide a broader and more comprehensive set of rights, and would ensure that they are protected against government interference.

3. The arguments against constitutional entrenchment

Some argue that constitutional entrenchment would be a mistake. They argue that it would be too restrictive, and that it would prevent the government from making necessary changes to the Constitution. However, it is important to remember that the Constitution is a living document, and that it can be amended to address new issues that arise.

4. How would a Charter of Rights affect us?

A Charter of Rights would affect us by ensuring that our rights are protected against government interference. It would also provide a broader and more comprehensive set of rights, and would ensure that they are protected against private interference.

Support the Republican

Books - POST FREE

Free or $2.50

Books - POST FREE

Free or $2.50

Order by phone: 1300 786 716

www.republican.com.au

SUBSCRIPTION FORMS

Please visit the Republican's website or call 1300 786 716 for more information.

Subscription to the Republican is available in print and online.

The Republican's website is available at republican.com.au.